Patchy fog across the north will lift by mid to late morning with only a few clouds persisting across the south. Sunshine and lower humidity will be the rule for today and Friday, thanks to a large area of high pressure sliding by to our north across New England. Due to the passing cold front maximum temperatures are back to normal. Highs will range from the upper 70s through the Southwest, to the upper 60s through the Northeast.

Another cold front will push through later Saturday into Sunday, bringing our next chance for showers and thunderstorms.
